

Samus brought her ship into dock with the station, the docking bay walls closing behind her. In her adventures through the galaxy she had received a signal from a remote research station. The signal informed her that the station was inhabited by a scientist AI which was programmed to keep inventing and researching for eternity. If she came to investigate, she'd be offered many new ways to "expand" her arsenal. She came here to see if that was true. She stepped off of her ship to investigate, Zero Suit clinging to her soft curves all the while.

She didn't have to walk for long until she found the main hall. Samus was surprised by what she saw, in the hall was a giant computer screen, after approaching it lights flashed and it sprung to life. A robotic voice began to speak.

"Welcome to my station Samus Aran. Inside of my database I contain thousands of chip based upgrades, upon insertion into your Zero Suit, your physical body will be enhanced greatly depending on the upgrade you select. All of which can be combined with others to enhance the effects of both or create entirely new ones. Furthermore, these same chips can be modified or upgraded independently. Occasionally the upgrade may change your mind, body and reality around you to the extremes. Some chips are not of my creation and others may be hidden throughout the station, perhaps you'll have to pay for certain others you come across. I can also modify your own ship with the same technology to better suit the form you take. If necessary, I can also deploy creatures, humans and robots stored inside of the station via cloning or otherwise."

After the AI finished his lengthy speech, the screen switched with a flicker and rows of upgrades appeared. There were thousands and they were all compatible with her Zero Suit, all she had to do was insert one into it. She came to the conclusion the signal wasn't lying, the AI had done what it was told, researched, created and found upgrades for years and years. But how was Samus going to get the upgrades into her suit?

As if on command the AI jabbed lightly into Samus' suit with a small robotic arm, seconds later a small usb-like port opened at the very back of her neck on the zero suit, allowing upgrades easy access directly into her spine.

Samus found that all of them were for a variety of different purposes. Some were for combat, some were for explicit, lewd reasons, some were completely bizarre, and some others were left here by entirely different scientists or organizations, perhaps for their own testing. Though they all had one thing in common, they would change Samus with technology so powerful it blurred the line between magic and science, completely shaping reality, and her, to its will.

Right now, all of them were at Samus' disposal, no matter how suspicious or useless some were she could pick what she pleased. She decided it was time to try some out, Samus looked back to the monitor and began her search through the list for the perfect "power up".